TABLE OF CONTENTS

Formed in 1853, Alameda County boasted a population of 1,510,271 people as of 2010. In addition to having several very active historic preservation organizations and the Bancroft library at Berkeley, Alameda is also the former home of a thriving coal mining industry and of course, Jack London. If you are looking for exciting local history resources in the California History Section's rich collections, then check out what we have for this county!
